The former St. Ann Elementary School, recently operating as an education resource centre that has been left vacant over the last two months, is on shaky ground.

Halton Catholic District School Board (HCDSB) trustees are weighing the decision to demolish the building that was also once an elementary school on Hixon Street after receiving a staff report outlining the recommendation as a cost-saving measure.

Many trees were recently removed from the former St. Ann School property on Hixon Street because of emerald ash borer (EAB) infestation. Now, the Halton Catholic school board is moving to demolish the school to contain costs of maintaining a vacant property. | Oakville Beaver file photo
